DIRPOLIS

The DIRPOLIS Institute carries out innovative research in the fields of:

- Law;
- Economics;
- and Political Sciences.

This multidisciplinary approach allows a global representation of complex legal, political, social and economic phenomena.

It also facilitates the creation of high-profile scientific research, which is directly applicable to external stakeholders that have decision-making responsibilities at various levels (international, national, regional, and local).

Interaction with Project Partners and Stake-holders

Contribution to Task 1.3

- Broad review of the relevant international (universal) obligations and initiatives concerning Weather & Climate induced hazards emergency management.
- Study of the EU legal, policy and institutional framework dealing with Weather & Climate induced hazards emergency management
- Study of the ethical, fundamental rights and legal standards that may impact on the development and employment of project's solutions (e.g. UAVs, social media and other tools for self-preparedness).
- examine if and how the “single official voice principle” applies in the EU and targeted MSs (i.e. the States where pilots will be run + few other States), and what the enforcement of the principle implies from a legal and ethical point of view;
- examine the EU and national legal and policy regimes governing self-preparedness and self-protection.
